Strictly High Grown (SHG) specifies the altitude at which the coffee was grown. A coffee must be grown at 1,200 meters above sea level or higher to be considered SHG. The higher altitude and lower temperatures mean that the coffee fruit matures more slowly, creating a denser bean.

The country's fertile soils, high elevations (most farms above 1,000 meters), and diverse microclimates create ideal conditions for specialty coffee. Since the early 2000s, investments in processing, quality control, farmer training, and cooperatives have significantly improved coffee quality.
